MW466 Community Health For Midwifery Clinical

Second Semester 2020-2021

Course Catalog

3 Credit Hours. The course provides practice essential to the assessment, planning, implementation & evaluation of the clients across the lifespan in the community-individuals, families, groups, and the community itself. Emphasis is on the study and application of midwifery role components inherent in community health for health promotion, and disease prevention based on the concepts of primary health care and home health care for women and their families. Students are directed toward implementation of the midwifery model through applying primary, secondary, and tertiary prevention of disease for women and their families in a community setting. In particular, providing highly qualified, culturally relevant and sensitive care to women during pregnancy, childbirth and postpartum periods and their (fetuses and newborns). In addition, provides care for special groups (children under 5 years and adolescents girls). It also guides the student midwife to utilize the tools to understand some important facts in their local communities that may have an effect on health. There will be special focus on women's roles and the health and mortality pathways that might exist in the community. Clinical practice is designed to provide the student with the opportunity to observe, participate & function independently, to explore midwifery skills & techniques related to health promotion, health maintenance, & health restoration & disease prevention among the target aggregates in primary health care settings (clinics, homes, schools & nursery).
